Abstract:

The collection is organized into two series:

The first series of photographs is organized by street numbers and addresses. Earlier photographs are shown first with the later photograph after to show the more recent status to the properties.

The early pictures, taken between 1940-1970, were commissioned by the city of Chicago and were taken by Copelin Photographers. The photographs are 8x10 prints in black and white format. These shots documented dangerous/condemned structures throughout the city. The City of Chicago then used these photographs to authorize renovation, development, or demolition of these properties.

The later pictures were taken by James S. Parker between 2000-2002 on a 35mm camera. Parker returned to these properties to document what happened to these specific locations. Some of the properties were turned into new housing, parks, schools, and churches. However, many of the pictures taken by Parker show that much of the land was left undeveloped as vacant land lots after the properties were demolished.

Overall, these photographs illustrate how policy, economic conditions, and urban renewal influenced the changing of demographics in the Bronzeville community.

The second series is an Excel worksheet that provides footnotes on addresses and properties near notable events and residences in the Bronzeville community.
